

THREE NEW PLAYS MAKE DEBUT

One, However, Does Not Measure Up to Requirements

THE REVIEW OF THE RIALTO

Aphrodite Comes to Close—Other Broadway News

NEW YORK.—"The Letter of the Law" from the French, "Jane Clegg" and "Sacred and Profane Love" from the English and "Tack Toe" from somewhere, were the current productions this week. The latter can easily be discarded as demanding no attention, whatever. "The Letter of the Law" was acted by Lionel Barrymore, Zeffie Tilbury and Russ Whytal among others in a cast more voluminous than earlier. It is a new title for Eugene Brien's treatise of the evils of French jurisprudence called "The Red Robe." Lionel Barrymore himself gives a gripping and impressive performance, and the staging is adequate. Some of the parts are carefully played, but the plot is the role of the wife, made furious by the injustice of the law. This part has been entrusted to Doris Rankin, and falls lamentably below the demands. As a result the play wins only by the sheer power of Mr. Barrymore's individual performance. The play is a powerful arraignment of French law and in respects may be applied to our own laws as well. It grips and holds the attention after the first act, and the reviewers, passing judgment, gave it a reserved approval.

"Jane Clegg," by St. John Ervine, is another play of great power and interest. It is by the author of "John Ferguson" and was staged by the commendable Theatre Guild with Margaret Wycherly playing the title role and playing it with effective and discriminating power. Dorothy Digges, Helen Westley and others are likewise in the cast, but except for Miss Wycherly none give an inspired performance. Mr. Digges, who has won rare distinction by previous work, popularizes the role of Henry Clegg, and makes him sufficiently an "absolute rotter" as required, but his sincerity is less genuine than that of Miss Wycherly, who really creates a new era in her professional career. The play is so human, so genuine and so impressive that in its entirety it makes a strong and lasting appeal, and adds one more play to the limited list devoted to those called worthy.

In "Sacred and Profane Love," adapted to stage purposes by Arnold Bennett, the author of the original story which was published as "The Story of Caribotta," of considerable more interest than the play which is mildly interesting in the happy return to the speaking stage of Elsie Ferguson who has been absent all too long while enjoying film experience and profit. The story is unusually complete, and possesses the novelty of originality. Recounting the descent in the social scale of a highly sensitive artist, though the heartlessness of a woman, it traces his career until the final scene which is one of the best acted and most impressive seen this season. Here the woman finds the man for whom she previously professed a passion, through her desertion degraded by drugs and lost to all sense of decency. She awakens his soul, brings him back to the real life again, and presumably atones for the result of her cruelty. Miss Ferguson and Jose Rubin play this scene admirably, and this particular incident does much to win for the play and its carefully chosen cast a high degree of success.

"The Passion Flower," a powerful drama from the Spanish of Jacinto Benavente, has been removed to the Belmont Theatre and will blossom here for some time to come. Notice O'Neil has found in this remarkable play one of her most impressive roles.

"Aphrodite," the lady widely advertised as sensu night, was again exhibited to New York this time in operatic form with Mary Garden as the lady in question. It brought

"OH BABY" BIT OF EVERYTHING

In "Oh Baby" the 1919-20 edition of the perennial series of Marcus extravaganzas which comes to the stage Saturday, March 13, includes and night the effort has been made to amalgamate every known form of stage entertainment from grand opera to travesty. If there is anything missing to make this mélange complete no doubt Impresario Marcus will esteem it a personal favor if the lack is pointed out.

To enumerate the various forms of entertainment represented in "Oh Baby" would be to mention every known style past and present. An idea of the extent of "Oh Baby" may be gathered when one sees Mike Sacks and his assistant clown engaged in a comic game of poker, employing the most nonsensical of material, and the next instant the ridiculous gives place to the sublime when out of the blue Yvonne Vallal, Miss Roland Zermann and the corps de ballet in the French club divertissement, "The Artists' Model." As one laughs at Mike Sacks and Charlie Abbott so does one marvel at the acrobatics of Marie Gerard or the flash of the droll little "Crazy" ballet. Then there is the instrumental melody of the Moritz Sisters, to please the musically inclined, and of all emotions evoked none can be more potent than those engendered by the frequent appearance of the Marcus Peaches. In truth "Oh Baby" in the old days would have been a possum cake—there were such animals. Its diversity of features are slanted forth only to give one a moment later to something else unique in character. So rapid is to a close the local engagement of the Chicago opera association which has been highly unsatisfactory. At the Greenwich Village Theatre, Rudolph Bogislav, the most remarkable singer of character songs we have, is appearing in recitals. She sings Topsy songs exquisitely and offers the most interesting program of the musical season.

"Mama's Affair," the Harvard prize play, written by Rachel Barton Butler, has been removed to the Fulton Theatre and continues to make a strong appeal to lovers of clean, high class and scintillating comedy. Elsie Shannon, Ida St. Leon, "Little Billy," Robert Johnson and Amelia Bingham contribute to the success by an intelligent understanding of Miss Barton's lines and situations. This playwright has another play to be produced shortly.

"The Storm," by Langdon McCormick, which is still reigning on Broadway, is to be produced in London by George Broadhurst. The present cast, which includes one intelligent and talented English actor in Robert Rendel, will in all probability be retained for the British engagement.

Nancy Van Kirk, a young and new musical artist in the local field is presenting a program of songs and story for children which probably will be the nucleus for a series of children's theatres. New York has hundreds of playhouses but thus far none devoted to the kiddie.

MISS YVONNE VALLAL, prima ballerina with the Marcus Show, whose dance conceptions, "The Artist's Dream," "Danse d'Eve," and "Gates of Araby" are features of "Oh Baby," which is due at the Faurot Saturday March 13.

ORPHEUM—The vaudeville bill of six first-class acts, commencing their engagement at the Orpheum Theatre at the noon hour this afternoon and the two shows tonight, is one of the best that has come to the Market street playhouse this year. From opening until closing number, there is not a dull spot on the program. The headliners are Housh and LaVelle, a man and a woman, who present a half-hour of expertly edited "It Happened in Arizona." They manage to keep audiences in a state of laughter from beginning until end of their offering. And what is more, they introduce several very beautiful new songs. John E. Connor and Sister have one of the most beautiful comedy acts ever seen in Lima. Art, whirling popular dancing songs that every crowd loves, and a child of New York and another make up their amusement morsel. Jack Kerr is a riot of mirth as a black face comedian who doesn't have to buy his jokes. Homer and Duhand are a big hit in their "Honey Store Chase." Kovans is the most popular xylophonist of the year. Lynn and Una Wesley dispense unalloyed joy. There will be a complete change of vaudeville at the Orpheum Monday.

"Making the Movies" will be an all-week featured attraction, in addition to the regular program of big-time acts. The stage of the Orpheum will be converted into a model motion picture studio at the end of each vaudeville program and, at each performance, a different scene of a photoplay written by a local author and played by an entire cast of local persons will be taken. The completed motion picture will be shown during the week of March 15 in addition to the usual program of big-time gram and, at each performance, a different scene of a photoplay written by a local author and played by an entire cast of local persons will be taken. THE CABIN

(LA BARACA) by VINCENTE BLASCO IBANEZ
Translated from the Spanish by Frances Haffkins and Beatrice M. Mekota

SYNOPSIS
The locale of "The Cabin" is laid in Valencia, Spain. Pepita, the heroine of the story, is the wife of Toni, an indolent farmer. She sells milk and vegetables in the early morning while her husband remains in bed. As she hears the fishermen's quarter, she hears a young girl calling loudly to her. The girl proves to be an old friend of Pepita's, who, leading a sinful life, has returned to her home town and obtained work under the assumed name of Elías. They part, promising to meet again. On her way home, Pepita passes a caravan, ostensibly from some distant land, which is composed of a husband and wife, five children and a mass of poor furnishings. To her amazement they enter the lands of a ruined "baronia," the decayed and disreputable former habit of Elías's family, the Barreiros, who years before had resigned as aristocrats in the province. Pepita hastens home to tell her husband the news. The lands of the huerta were rented by a miserly landlord, Don Salvador, who had all but driven the Barreiros to starvation by excessive rental. At last, unable to pay his rental, the landlord orders the family to move out, taking the furnishings wherever they can pay the debt. Old Barret, however, determines to defend the ancestral home with his life. But the landlord succeeds in closing the house, leaving the family to depend on the help of neighbors.

He searched in his sash for the pasteboard strip of matches he needed to set fire to the straw-roof. Let the devil fly away with it all; it was his own, anyway, as God knew, and he could destroy his own property and would do so before he would see it fall into the hands of thieves.

But just as he was going to set fire to his old house, he felt a sensation of horror, as if he saw the ghosts of all his ancestors rising up before him; and he hurried the strip of matches to the ground.

But the longing for destruction continued roaring through his head, and sickle in hand, he set forth over the fields which had been his ruin.

Now at a single stroke he would get even with the ungrateful earth, the cause of his misfortunes.

The destruction lasted for entire hours. Down they came tumbling to his heels, the arches of cane upon which the green tendrils of the tender kidney-beans and peas were climbing; parted by the furious sickle, the beans fell, and the cabbages and lettuce, driven by the sharp steel, flew wide with severed heads, scattering their rosettes of leaves all around. No one should take advantage of his labour.

And thus he went on mowing until the break of dawn, trampling under foot with mad stampings, shouting curses, howling blasphemies, until weariness finally deadened his fury, and casting himself down upon a furrow, he wept like a child, thinking that the earth hereafter would be his real bed, and his only occupation begging in the streets.

He was awakened by the first rays of the sun striking his eyes, and the joyful twitter of the birds which hopped around his head, availing themselves of the remnants of the nocturnal destruction for their breakfast.

Benumbed with weariness and chilled with the dampness, he rose from the ground. Pimento and his wife were calling him from a distance, inciting him to come and take thing. Barret answered them with scorn. Thief! After taking away his shot-gun! And he set out on the road toward Valencia, trembling with cold, without even knowing where he was going.

He stopped at the tavern at Cop, and entered. Some teamsters of the neighborhood spoke to him, expressing sympathy in his misfortune and invited him to have a drink. He accepted gratefully. He craved something which would counteract the cold, which had penetrated his very bones. And he who had always been so sober, drank, one after the other, two glasses of brandy, which led to his weakened stomach like way of fire.

His face flushed, then became deadly pale; his eyes grew bloodshot. To the teamsters who sympathized with him, he seemed expressive and confident, almost like one who is happy. He called them his sons, assuring them that he was no fittering over so little. Nor had he lost everything. There still remained in his possession the best thing in his house, the sickle of his grand father, a jewel which he could not exchange, no, not for fifty measures of grain.

And from his sash he drew forth the curved steel, an implement brilliant and pure, of fine temper and very keen edge, which, as Barret declared, would cut a cigarette-paper in the air.

The teamsters paid up, and urging on their beasts, set off for Valencia, filling the air with the creaking of wheels.

The old man stayed in the tavern for more than an hour, talking to himself, feeling more and more dizzy, until, made ill at ease by the hard glances of the landlord, who divined his condition, he experienced a vague feeling of shame, and set out with unsteady steps without saying good-bye.

But he was unable to dispel from his mind a tenacious remembrance. He could see, as he closed his eyes, a great orchard of oranges which was about an hour's distance, between Bonimaclet and the sea. There he had gone many times on business, and there he would go now to see if the devil would be so good as to let him come across the master, as there was hardly a day that his precious glances did not respect the beautiful trees, in which he had the oranges counted on every one.

He arrived after two hours of walking, during which he stopped many times to balance his body, which was swaying back and forth upon his unsteady legs.

The brandy had now taken complete possession of him. He could no longer remember for what purpose he had come here, so far from that part of the huerta in which his own family lived, and finally he let himself fall into a field of hemp at the edge of the road. In a short time, his laboured sobs of drunkenness sounded among the green straight stalks.

When Old Barret awoke, the afternoon was well advanced. He felt heavy of head and his stomach was faint. There was a humming in his ears, and he had a horrible taste in his coated mouth. What was he doing here, near the miser's huerta? Why had he come so far? His instinctive sense of honour arose; he felt ashamed at seeing himself in such a state of debasement and he tried to get on his feet to go away. The pressure on his stomach caused by the sickle which lay crosswise in his sash, gave him chills.

On standing up, he thrust his head out from among the hemp, and he saw, in a turn of the road, a little man who was walking slowly along enveloped in a cape.

Barret felt all his blood suddenly rise to his head; his drunkenness came back on him again. He stood up, tugging at his sickle. And yet they say that the devil is not good here was his man; here was the one whom he had been wanting to see since the day before.

The old usurer had hesitated before leaving his house. The affair of old Barret had pricked his conscience; it was a recent event and the huerta was treacherous; but the fear that his absence might be taken advantage of in the huerta was stronger even than his cowardice, and remembering that the orange estate was distant from the attached rainhouse, he set out on the road.

Love and Married Life

By IDA McGLONE GIBSON

CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWO MEN?

Has Karl Shepard gone? I asked quickly, after Helen had given me his message.

"Yes, he went back on the next train," she answered.

"It was like him," I murmured.

Helen came forward and with her arms on my shoulders looked me straight in the eye, but he did not ask a question. I knew what she wanted to say. It was just what I was asking myself. Did I love Karl Shepard, and was I sure that he loved me.

In all ages men have said that it is perfectly possible for a man to love two women devotedly at the same time. Poets have made it a subject of their verse and innumerable plays and novels have been written around it.

Indeed I have heard many men declare that no one woman could be all things to one man, but no one has ever intimated for a moment that one man could not meet all the requirements of one woman. And yet I questioned if this liking or loving, if you may call it so, of certain people for certain attributes making it possible to love two or even three people at the same time, is not a very human quality and not confined to either sex.

Soul Feels the Consolation
My whole bruised soul felt the consolation of Karl's sympathy, silent but beautifully expressed. I loved his selflessness, it seemed to me I had never encountered a man who was so perfectly willing to make me happy at whatever cost to himself.

On the other hand, just to look into John's eyes when they were smiling, just to feel the touch of his hand on my shoulder, just to brush his coat sleeve with my hand made me tingle from head to foot.

He was my man. I knew it.

The only thing that I was not sure about was that I was his woman.

Right at this moment, I think, I lost all belief in that foolish theory that in all the world there is just one man for one woman and one woman for one man.

If that were so, nature is a great bungler and we poor mortals are most of us doomed to earthly unhappiness.

"What shall I do with these violets," said Helen. "Do you want our mother to have them?"

"Yes," I answered. "Put them all about her, except this one little bunch which I am going to take with me to my room."

Pull for the Casket
"There are enough, you know," said Helen, "to make a pall for the casket. 'Shall I have a florist come and make them into one?'"

"Yes, and when he is finished have him tie a cluster of Melmaison roses in one corner."

Helen said nothing more, but went to the phone to give the order to a local florist.

I wanted to get away and be alone, but I was not sure if I went to my room that I would not be disturbed immediately by Alice and John, and I did not feel that I could stand their bickering. It never entered my mind, however, after what John had said to me that he would have any objection to my staying with Helen. I thought, of course, he understood what she had done for me and was willing to let me keep my friend. My mind was disabused of this rather rudely when, before Helen left the telephone, she said, "Someone is calling for you."

"Ask who it is," I answered.

"Who is speaking?" asked Helen. Immediately I saw her face suffused with crimson.

"I think it is your husband," she said, turning to me. "He will not give his name."

Makes No Excuse
I knew that John had said something insulting, or at least rough, to Helen over the phone, but I made no excuse as I took the receiver from her.

"Is that you, Katherine?" came in brusque tones.

"Yes," I answered, nonchalantly. "Do you think it is quite the thing to make social visits under the circumstances?" he asked sarcastically. "No, and I am not doing so," I answered as calmly as I could.

"Are you not in Mrs. Gaylord's room?" was his query. "Yes, John." "Then I think you had better come immediately to your own." (Copyright, 1920.)

V.—The Black-Handers in Session.

HERE Comito tells of a meeting of the counterfeiters in a farmhouse. He says:

"Upon entering the house, which was close by Cina's farmhouse, I saw a table in a room on the ground floor and around this table were seated the following bandits: Ignazio Lupo, Giuseppe Morello, Antonio Cecala, Uncle Salvatore (Giuseppe Palermo), Uncle Vincent, Vincenzo Giglio, Bernardo Perrone, Nicola Sylvester, besides a man from Brooklyn whom the gang called Domenico and who was a baker, and five other men whose names I did not know. Cina was not there, being occupied with his family, where a birth was expected momentarily.

"As I stepped in no one motioned to recognize me nor was my greeting returned. Mechanically I took a seat. After about ten minutes of sinister silence and ill-boding glances, Cina broke the strain as he came rushing in with Peppino, his brother, both of them laughing and shouting like madmen.

"A boy! A boy!" they yelled. "Cina received the congratulations of the gang. Silence once more haunted the room. Then Lupo turned to me abruptly and said:

"Don Antonio, your work is worthless. It is a rotten job; so much so that none of it could be sold. Cina and Cecala have risked their lives in trying to sell it. However, they have sold some four thousand dollars of the counterfeit money, taking in, all in all, about one thousand dollars in genuine money. They have expended about two hundred dollars on their trip to different cities distributing our product. Therefore, there remains about eight hundred dollars, which will be divided among the ones that have advanced the first money. If you had turned out a good job we could have taken in more by selling it all. As it is, about seven or eight thousand dollars have been made for the stove.

"The Canadian money is worthless and must be burned. It cannot be put on the market. But this is no fault of yours, in this instance. It is the fault of the one who made the plates.

"Now you watch how the money is divided. If there is any left, you get it. These men present will not accept a penny of the remainder until those who advanced the money have been settled with."

"As my work did not turn out well, I replied to Lupo, 'give me only enough to return to New York.'

"No," broke in Morello, decisively. "We don't know yet whether you may return to New York or whether you are to continue the work in company with another man."

"You want money?" asked Lupo. "Who will give it to you. I have spent two hundred dollars and now will take that amount. There will be but six hundred dollars to be divided."

"Don't do things all your own way, Ignazio," Morello warned in his husky voice. "Let us deliberate and argue this thing out. There are eight hundred dollars. You have spent two hundred dollars. You get seventy-five dollars now. I have spent fifty dollars and will take it now, as I need it very much, as you know. Fifty dollars we will give to Cina, twenty dollars to Don Antonio, ten to Uncle Salvatore and ten more to Uncle Vincent, five to Giglio and five to Bernardo; what is left is needed for the continuation of the work with the other plates."

"And the man who made the plates, don't you want to give him anything?" inquired Cecala.

"Yes," was the reply in chorus.

"Well," turning to me, "take these twenty dollars," said Morello, "and return to the house. Await there the decision whether you are to return to New York or not."

"I accepted the money and tucked it into my pocket. Then I was driven to the stone house in a carriage accompanied by Cina's brother Peppino.

"During this session with the gang some of them got busy and started to burn up the Canadian five-dollar notes, and a portion of the two-dollar American notes. These were the notes returned as worthless by the gang. While throwing the notes into the stove Uncle Salvatore and Peppino exclaimed from time to time:

"What a shame. They might all have been sold."

"Once more at the stone house I explained to Caterina what had happened. I told her that they had given me the twenty dollars and that possible to get you twenty dollars a week, but I must first talk with the others, my friends, as you know that I am not alone in this undertaking. As to the eating, you will have all that you want and there will be wine. I will have a barrel of it shipped to Highland, direct to Cina, who will see that you get some when you want it."

"Who is this Cina?" asked Calichio, suspiciously.

"He is my godfather, whom you will know when you are in Highland," said Cecala.

"Perhaps he is that farmer whom I saw in Don Piddu's (Morello's) house last year?"

"Precisely," said Cecala.

"He continued: 'I will bring the first twenty dollars tomorrow. Tomorrow night you will leave with Comito?'

"All right. But first, I must see the plates and examine them to see whether they are good. If I am to do this work, it must be done perfectly. You know that I do not do things by halves. I must see whether the plates need retouching. I will bring my tools. If I am unable to use them for this work then we will buy some before leaving the city."

"Have no doubt," continued Cecala. "I will come tomorrow morning and show the plates to you, and

"After arranging that Giglio and Bernardo were to remain with Caterina, while I was in New York and Uncle Vincent went to Newburgh on business, I said that I would be ready for my trip in two days. Then Cina left me after he had warned me not to tell any of the secrets of the place, explaining how hard it was for the police to discover the plant. He declared I must be happy in the thought of future wealth.

On March 7, 1929, Cina returned to the stone house with a carriage, bringing Giglio and Bernardo to keep Caterina company. He drove me to the Highland station, and I got aboard the train for New York. Arriving at the Grand Central station I was met by Cecala, who took me to a house at No. 5 Jones Street. Not finding the party he was seeking there, he told me to go to my aunt's house and return to the Jones Street address at eight o'clock that evening and ask for Don Peppe.

"That same evening at the appointed hour I went to the Jones Street house and inquired in a grocery store on the street floor for Don Peppe. A woman indicated to me the door where I knocked. A bald-headed man, about forty-five years old, with a nice light brown mustache opened the door.

"Cecala was there seated in a chair. He introduced me to the man who opened the door saying that he was Giuseppe Calichio, a lithograph engraver, alias Don Peppe. Cecala turned to Calichio and said:

"Don Peppe, we are in need of your work. This man (indicating me) is a printer, but he is not capable of doing the work that we require. You must go with him and continue this work. It is already started and everything will go well. When we have printed two or three million dollars' worth we will stop. We are in luck."

"Unless we are discovered by the police," replied Calichio.

"Have no such fear," said Cecala.

"The place where the work is done is very secure. No one would ever suspect that such a thing is going there."

"Listen, Cecala," said Calichio. "If things happen as they did when I did work for you before, then I refuse to go. I do not care to work and risk my life and then get nothing for it."

"No, no," said Cecala. "You know that that work did not turn out at all well."

"I know nothing other than that you caused me to sell my little printing shop, and I am in terrible condition financially even now as a result of it. If you want me to do the work you speak about in company with brother Comito here, you must give me twenty dollars a week and board. I have a family in Italy to look after, don't forget. As long as you pay me what I want I am ready to work for you; but I must be paid in advance. The first week that you fail to pay me in advance I will cease to work and come home. And what is more, my dear Cecala, I want good eating and must have wine every day; as you know there is not a day that goes by without my drinking wine that I do not get a headache. The wine gives me strength and health."

Cecala's answer to this was characteristic:

"Don Peppe, I will do all that is leave. Buy what you need, because you will not return to New York until the work is completed."

"That night the three of us left on the 11 P. M. train for Highland. Arriving there at 2 in the morning, we were met at the station by Peppino Cina with a carriage. He told us that we must go directly to the stone house and not stop at Cina's farm because a strange face might arouse suspicion among the neighbors. We did not work that day. We took a much-needed rest."

"Calichio was up at an early hour and set to work retouching the two-dollar American note plates. He fixed the plates on wood blocks, made the press ready and got the right impression, prepared the ink and struck off proofs on several kinds of paper to see the effect of the ink and get the correct shade. He also prepared some chemicals with which to dampen the paper and give a darker shade. Having succeeded in getting the right shade of green Calichio explained that the color was the same as on the genuine notes and that all they needed now was the paper.

"Cecala then said he would leave immediately and have the paper shipped forthwith. Turning to me, Cecala gave instructions for me to obey the latter in every detail.

"I made no reply; only shook Cecala's hand and went to my aunt's. The next morning, I forgot whether it was the 9th or the 10th of "Suddenly Cecala turned on me and whispered: 'Don Antonio, what have you told your aunt?'

"Nothing," I replied.

"Did she ask where you are working?'

"No. She knows that I am working in Philadelphia."

"Good! If she asks with whom you are working in Philadelphia say that your employer is a priest, and his name is Bonaventura."

"Very well," I replied. "My aunt is not interested whether I am working with a priest or with a monk. I have told her that I was employed in a printing shop, nothing else."

"Good! You are an intelligent man, and that is why I and all my friends like you Calabrians, because you are secretive and are never corrupted. I knew a Calabrian who was arrested with counterfeit notes and him, once, and the policemen made him all kinds of promises and even punched him, in their effort to learn from him who had given him the counterfeit money to exchange; but he never told a word. He never squealed."

"I made no reply; only shook Cecala's hand and went to my aunt's.

"The next morning, I forgot whether it was the 9th or the 10th of

"After examining the work Lupo turned to Uncle Vincent and said:

"Uncle Vic—guess what's happened?'

"What?'

"Petrosino was killed in Italy."

"Honestly?'

"Honestly. The papers are talking about it."

"I said it," continued Uncle Vincent, "that if Petrosino went to Italy they would kill him."

"Who was the hero? He deserves a medal," said Cecala.

"And where have they killed him?" continued Uncle Vincent.

"In Palermo."

"Then it means that it was well done," said Uncle Vincent significantly.

"Certainly. The way it was done it could never fail," said Lupo.

"And—," Cecala said. "This was death becoming him. How many sons of mothers he has condemned for nothing."

"Hearing all this I asked:

"Who is this Petrosino?'

"He was the head of the secret police in New York," replied Cecala. "A homely man! Worse than the Baboon Plague."

"I never heard of him."

"You will never meet him," said Cecala dryly, the others grinning.

"Then it was successful!" continued Uncle Vincent.

"Certainly," replied Lupo.

"Lupo, Cecala, and Cina went outside and had some sport trying out their revolvers against the trees. When they returned, Lupo asked Calichio how long it would take to print the ten thousand two-dollar bills. About twenty days, was Calichio's estimate.

"Lupo then told Calichio that he would leave the plant, but would return at the end of the month and bring plates for five-dollar American notes. He addressed Calichio as 'dear Don Peppe' and told him to be prepared for the work and to take particular pains with the five-dollar notes, because he intended sending some of them to Italy."

"Have no doubts, replied Calichio. 'I have never done any work that was useless, and you know it. My work has always been perfect.'

"Bravo, Don Peppe, we know that you are a professional," said Cecala. "That same night about six P. M. Cecala, Lupo, and Cina went away, leaving me with Calichio, Uncle Vincent, Sylvester and Bernardo."

"During that month (March, 1929) we worked without interruption printing the two-dollar notes. About the 27th, the first twenty thousand dollars of the counterfeit two-dollar notes were ready and were turned over to Cina and Sylvester, who were to bring them to New York."

"After this first job of Calichio's workmanship had been turned over, on the last Sunday in March, Lupo returned in company with Cina, Sylvester and Giglio, who brought the plates for the five-dollar notes and about twenty thousand sheets of paper upon which to print the additional money."

"Upon receiving the plates Calichio looked them over attentively and said that they were copper plates and not zinc, and that there was need of slight retouching. He detected several lines that were not shown in the photograph on the face of the notes. These lines needed to be etched into the plates in the picture, which represented a farmer and an old man with a woman and a dog."

"Lupo explained to Calichio that Cecala was on the road about New York, Brooklyn and Hoboken, selling the two-dollar notes, but that as soon as he finished up this work he would return to the stone house and oversee the work there."

"Calichio prepared the press, fixed the inks, and printed the first proofs for the green side of the five-dollar notes. These were pronounced very good by Lupo and Uncle Vincent and they ordered that fifteen or twenty thousand of them be printed. Whatever paper was left was to be used for the two-dollar notes, which were very good and easily disposed of."

"On the night of the 29th, or 30th, of March, 1929, Lupo left in company with Uncle Vincent and Cina. Before leaving, however, instructions were given to Bernardo, Giglio and Sylvester to count the notes printed daily so that none could be unaccounted for and sold into circulation. The four that cheated might be practicing was evidently in Lupo's mind."

"We had been working about a week on the green side of the five-dollar notes when on April 5th, or 6th, Cina came to the stone house and told us to suspend the work and start in on the two-dollar notes, because there was a large demand for them from Boston, Buffalo and Chicago, where customers were anxiously awaiting a new supply. Calichio immediately got the press ready to print another ten thousand of the two-dollar notes."

"It was at this time that I decided not to continue the work and left the press because I was not spoken to but ignored entirely. Even Sylvester and Giglio called me by an obscene name and referred to me in the most distasteful language, horrible to hear because of the profanity. I told Cina I wanted him to write to Cecala and tell him to send me sufficient money for my fare to New York. At this Cina answered in the Sicilian dialect:

"You are waiting for me to blow your brains out. Now that we are at the point where we can earn some money, you get sassy. Here you are dealing with gentlemen; otherwise, by this time you would be dead. Go ahead and work. No more of this fussing."

"Then turning to Sylvester and Giglio, Cina continued: 'Pecioti! Boys, watch this Calabrian, and if he don't want to work, shoot him and make a hole for him in the farm.'

"After hearing this I felt like a whipped dog and kept my mouth closed. I went over to the press and started in to work. Calichio came over to me and said:

"Don Antonio, look out. Don't act this way with the people, because they are all of the (Mala-vita) Mafia and will do you harm in an instant. As long as you are among them you must obey orders, as I do, using prudence."

"Now it happened that for two weeks Calichio had not received his weekly salary and he became nervous for this reason. One day, when I did not want to print on wet paper, he dressed and went away. I thinking that he had just gone out, stopped working and waited for him to return. But at night, when Sylvester, Giglio and Bernardo saw that Calichio did not return, they threatened me with death. They threatened a loaded revolver at me saying that he would dig my eyes out; Giglio, taking an axe in his hand, said he wanted to cut my head off, but Caterina intervened and the threatening stopped. Sylvester left the stone house to carry the news to New York."

"Three days went by without any work being done, then Calichio returned in company with Sylvester and Cina. Cina handed me a note that I must obey Calichio's order or suffer terrible consequences. I worked on against my will under Calichio's orders."

"Cecala then took the proofs and put them in his pocket, saying that he would show them to Ignazio and Don Piddu (Lupo and Morello) and mark the difference between this and the first job, which was mine."

"Two days later Nick Sylvester came and brought with him a suitcase full of paper which he gave to Calichio saying:

"Tomorrow Ignazio will come to see how the work is going along. In the meantime you can proceed with the work and print. I will remain to help you."

"When Lupo arrived the next morning in company with Cecala and Cina they all came up to the work room. After examining the work they praised Calichio, telling him that they ought to give him a gold medal. As for me, I was deserved of a dirty, leather medal, the bandits hinted."

"Turning to me Lupo said, 'This homely Calabrian doesn't even deserve to be looked at. The work he did should have been burned on his head.'

"I did not reply, but played the simpleton."

"March, I went at the given hour to Calichio's house, where I found Cecala examining the zinc plates for the two-dollar American notes, of Piddu (Lupo and Morello) and mark the difference between this and the first job, which was mine."

"Calichio carefully examined the plates with a magnifying glass. He explained to us that the acids that were used for washing the plates were in strong and had destroyed some fine lines and that it would be necessary to retouch the plates and so raise the missing lines. He would do it himself, Calichio said, if the proper tools were brought to him."

Cecala quickly answered that the tools would be brought immediately and that we were to prepare to leave for Highland that night. We then went to a hardware store on the Bowery, and Calichio selected some chisels and other tools, for which Cecala paid. As soon as we were out of the store Cecala gave Calichio his first twenty dollars in advance. Turning to me, Cecala said:

"Don Antonio, Don Peppe and I are going to buy some chemicals. You can go away and be at Jones Street tonight at 10 P. M. ready to you can take them with you."

"Come tomorrow about 10 A. M. with Comito, and not before ten, because I expect a person on some personal business and do not want him to see you," counseled Calichio.

"During all this talk I did not say a word. On my way with Cecala to my aunt's house in Bleeker Street Cecala remarked:

"Don Antonio, that man Calichio is the professor for the job. In Italy he has printed for aristocratic families, who were in hard luck. He printed for these aristocrats about three million dollars in fifty, one hundred, five hundred and one thousand lire notes. This money was worked off in this country on people who were going to Italy on trips. Don Peppe is capable of transferring to lithographic stones the engraving on bank notes and then transfer the engraving from the lithographic stones on to zinc plates, and in this way perfect the plates that are necessary for our business."

"Is that how our plates were made?" I inquired.

"No. Ours were made by photography and a lot of preparations could not be successful in New York because he guarded his hide. Here he toted a revolver in his coat pocket and was guarded by two policemen a short distance behind him."

"It is a good example for the policemen," continued Uncle Vincent. "No one will now dare to go to Palermo. There they will find only sure death."

"Cina did not talk any because he was intent on spreading the counterfeit notes out in the garret floor. When he came downstairs to the workroom, however, he said:

"As soon as we can we must celebrate for joy; just now we will be content with a glass of wine."

"They all went downstairs and sat at a table conversing in low voices, and I could not understand what they said because the press made a noise and interfered with my hearing."

"I and Uncle Vincent continued to work at the press under Calichio's directions. Sylvester would take the notes as they were printed and spread them out on the floor in the garret to dry. Bernardo was stationed outside, armed with rifle and revolver to guard the house and to 'spot' any person who might pass or prow about the premises."

ALIENS BREAK U. S. VOTING LAWS

Unnaturalized Citizens Cast Ballots at American Polls

CAUSE OF MANY DEFEATS

Illegal Voters Turn the Tide, Columbus Judge Declares

BY GEORGE T. BLAKE)
COLUMBUS — Aliens in Ohio, without any right to vote, cast enough ballots every election to turn the tide of any close contest, according to Judge John E. Sater, of the United States District Court in Columbus. Ohio is now for or against national prohibition by a few more than a hundred votes and it is safe to say that many times the votes of this meagre majority were cast by unnaturalized foreigners in any one of the larger cities.

The vast majority of these aliens are innocent of any wrong doing, Judge Sater believes, for they are so ignorant of American laws and customs that they believe that living in this country, or being born in the United States entitled them to the right of suffrage. The fact, though, that aliens have and wield the balance of power in close elections is a challenge which the state and nation must meet, the federal judge believes. Americanization and all that it means is the solution to the problem.

"When I was at Camp Sherman last year naturalizing alien soldiers, I was surprised to note the large per cent of those men who declared that they had already voted," said Judge Sater. "Assuming that there were only five per cent in that large gathering who had voted you will see what a vast number that would mean in the state."

Observations made at Camp Sherman have convinced Judge Sater that compulsory military training is one of the best means of Americanizing foreigners and making them worthy of the right of suffrage. He has little use for voluntary universal military training, believing that it will get no farther than the national guard. He has less patience for pacifists who argue that compulsory military training will reduce America to the same status of Germany prior to the war.

TO TAKE CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE

State Secretary Will Gather Farm Data

COLUMBUS.—That one of the most exhaustive census of agriculture ever taken in Ohio will be made this spring is the belief of N. E. Shaw, state secretary of agriculture, in which the great volume of information will be gathered by the assessors throughout the state.

In describing how this is to be brought about Mr. Shaw called attention to the fact that the present law requires each farmer to fill out a blank on the back of the regular assessment sheet, giving facts regarding acreage in crops, numbers of livestock, fertilizers, etc.

The information thus gathered will be tabulated by the county auditor and forwarded to the state department of agriculture. The information which the farmers will furnish through this manner includes answers to questions relative to acreage planted or intended to be planted in 1920.

Other data will be gathered by the department's large corps of correspondents throughout the state numbering more than 5,000, there being three in every township who submit regular reports on crop conditions, farm prices and live stock. That these reports are considered of great value is indicated in the interest of progressive farmers and business men who study them.

HARTLINE GIVEN MANAGEMENT OF MOTOR SALES CO.

Lima Motor Car Company Takes Temporary Location.

A temporary location has been taken by the Lima Motor Car company, recently organized. The new company is now installed in the rooms formerly occupied by the Standard Garage, at the intersection of Buckeye and Cherry Alleys. This location will be occupied by the company until such a time when their new building will be finished.

Already a site has been selected and building will be started as soon as weather conditions permit. The new sales company is the authorized agents for Velie Six and Peerless Eight cars. Joe C. Hartline, formerly director and sales manager of the Lima Overland Company has accepted the position of general manager of the concern and is now in charge of the company's interests.

Mr. Hartline announced Saturday that he has received a shipment of cars and that the stock of cars is now complete and an immediate delivery can be made of any model of either of the cars. This is the first time that either of these makes of cars has appeared on the Lima markets.

OHIO STEEL OUTPUT SHOWS UPWARD TREND

Added facilities in the shape of a new open hearth furnace and more unloading devices at the Ohio Steel Foundry have increased the daily output of the plant, officials of the company gave out Saturday.

A furnace with a daily capacity of 25 tons has been installed at the foundry and the unloading of cars of iron, steel and other material is being speeded up with the placing of a huge overhead crane.

Each Week Shows Progress

A week ago we announced that the structural steel for our Heavy Machine Shop had arrived at our plant. Despite the handicaps of Winter weather this steel is now practically all erected and the huge frame work of this building is in place.

The structural steel for our Foundry Building is now en route.

Our three story Office Building is being rapidly completed and will be ready for occupancy March 15th.

This tremendous activity is caused by the urgent need in the tire industry for more MOLDS and CORES,—products which we are now producing at our plant.

We now have orders on our books sufficient to keep our plant in operation months in advance.

The Sensation of Motordom

The Keenest Contest of All Motordom This Year, Was to Be the First to Bring Out the Authoritative
Style That Everybody Knew Was Coming

New comfort in longer body—more room—more rest in soft, deep-plaited upholstery. With the style advance goes the new motor—with internally heated vaporizer, 4-bearing crankshaft, bronze backed bearings. Silent, supple, satisfying—on low-grade fuel. More power at less cost.

It is the Velie's triumph. In the new 1920 Velie the idea of to-day is realized ahead of all others. It is a subtle combination of mirror-like planes that seem to flow into each other—a new expression to the old automobile graces. You have to see it to appreciate how perfectly it is done.

We are not compelled to tell you that you can get your car in two months.

OHIO RIVERS WILL BE PURIFIED

Polluted Streams to Benefit by Scientific Discovery

COLUMBUS. — Polluted streams throughout Ohio will be cleared up within a period of two years, is the opinion expressed by A. C. Baxter, chief of the Ohio Fish and Game Department, which is based upon the scientific discovery that is not far past the experimental stage and which has been developed through the efforts of that department through the use of a device known as the "Lewis Filter," which costs of a dollar to the taxpayers of Ohio. The new discovery which is known as the "Lewis Filter," system is cause of being called out by J. I. Lewis and J. I. Fawcett of B. H. H. is said to cost less than three cents per thousand gallons to produce and it is to be furnished free to industry by the department. The evolution of the pollution problem will be brought about by the simple chemical treatment of refuse in a vat, which pollution including all elements detrimental to fish and vegetable life remains in the vat and can be easily removed and used in making by-products such as soap or fertilizer, while clear water pure enough for stock to drink or fish to live in flows into the stream.

The fish and game department plans to clean up the polluted streams without hampering industry in any way, and as fast as the tanks are cleared up they will be re stocked with game fish and restored to their natural beauty. The development of the solution is aroused such interest that by request a demonstration was given a few days ago before the American Game Protective association at its conference.

Game Warden of Ohio will also police over the fact that part which they have so well to be restored in their home communities by the cleaning of the streams and the stocking of them with fish.

DORT

Quality Goes Clear Through

It is a matter of actual fact that Dort owners find but the barest fraction of their time taken up with giving mechanical attention to the car.

It "stands up", as the saying is, in the most difficult service with a dogged endurance.

In addition, it handles with admirable ease and lightness, and drives smoothly and quietly.

Furthermore, and this is important, the Dort averages a very high mileage per gallon of gas and quart of oil.

It is essentially a car you can depend upon for both excellence and economy in performance.

Steels in a Maxwell that Defy Time

THE steels in a Maxwell are as good as the steels in any car built.

For the very mission of a Maxwell is economy of transportation.

One single superfluous pound burdens the car's efficiency.

Therefore it had to be light—but it had to be strong; it had to endure; it had to stand the worst of road shocks.

To make it strong but light in weight meant the very generous use of those rare steels that provide both.

In that way a Maxwell came to be endowed with steels that defy time, defy wear, defy shock, defy the moods of the careless driver.

You will find a Maxwell delivers extended mileage—as long life as any car built, no matter what the price.

And not only long mileage but economic mileage. Because fine steels give little trouble and light weight spins out the mileage on a gallon of gasoline.

Such traits have made friends for the Maxwell in ever growing numbers—nearly 400,000 to date.

Only 100,000 can be built this year. That means 60,000 will have to take another car besides Maxwell—a second-choice car.

Studebaker

THOUSANDS of people have fully determined to buy a new car for delivery before the first warm day of spring.

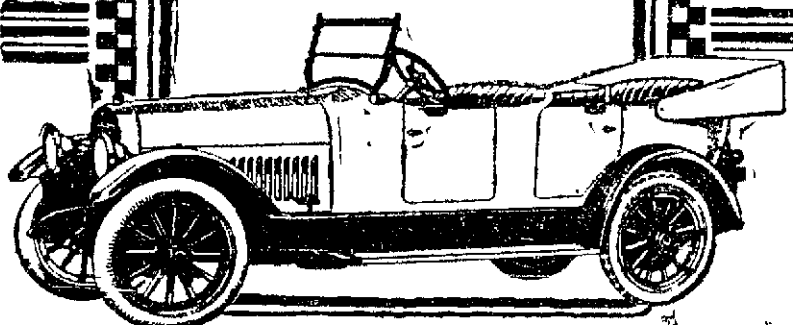

Many are doomed to disappointment. We are facing the greatest shortage of good automobiles the industry has ever known. And this shortage will be most acute when cars will be most in demand.

Dealers have been unable to accumulate any stock of cars for spring delivery.

You will run less chance of disappointment if you place your order for a Studebaker now.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

Some people always buy reserved seats way in advance of the big show, others never do until all others do, then most of them stand.

Some people are still believing they can secure a new Ford car just any time they care to go and buy one.

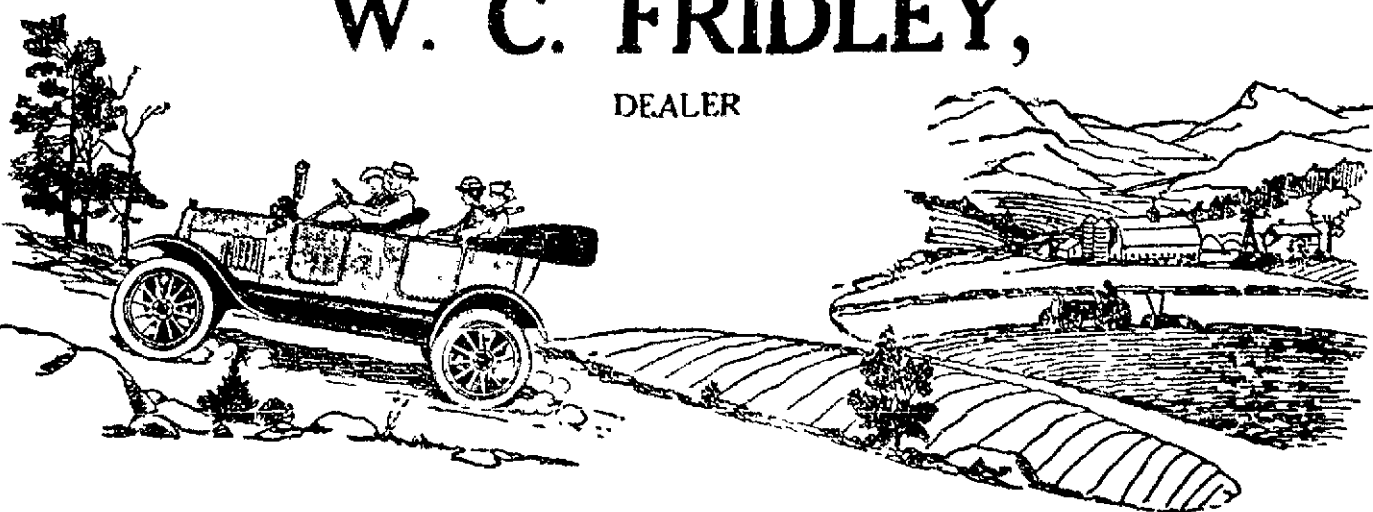

During the past cold months we have been selling and delivering motor cars to wise, believing customers who now have their car ready for instant use. These people will have a new car for service during each of the wonderful driving days now just at hand. We congratulate these customers.

The fellow who bought at the wise time paid no more than those who will wait and miss many of the joyful days touring.

Buy your Ford now if you are needing one, each day you wait means weeks of waiting for delivery while the summer days are speeding by.

CITY DUE FOR BIG REALTY BOOM

Heavy Demand Without Price Inflation Is Cause.

A heavy demand for residence properties in the industrial section has not inflated real estate values during the past week. With the assurance of better street car service and the coming industrial expansion for homes has arisen in these parts of town to equal that in any other section. These were the optimistic signs seen by Fred B. Williams, Lima Real Estate Board, for an unusual spring revival in real estate circles. At present prices some very good investments are being made by the workingman Williams holds.

A Woman's Verdict

Tells of Suffering Greatly with Kidney and Bladder Trouble and How Balmwort Brought Relief.

Her Letter Well Worth Reading

Mrs. Nellie McGinn, 609 East 135th street, New York City, writes: "For the last year I had suffered greatly from Kidney and Bladder trouble, distressing pain in the back and hips, with rheumatic twinges and frequent severe headache, accompanied by nervousness, chills and fever; also a frequent desire to eliminate, a smarting, burning sensation with pain in the region of the bladder. I would frequently have to arise at night, my sleep being disturbed by the pressure and inflammation in bladder. Beginning the use of Balmwort Tablets I noticed almost instant relief, and continuing to use them I am now totally well and relieved of all pain and distress from which I suffered. I am glad to recommend Balmwort Tablets as a reliable beneficial medicine and trust others may find relief and freedom from pain and distress as I did, etc."

The above letter is a true statement and is on file in our offices Balmwort Tablets bring relief when other medicines have failed. Sold by leading druggists, $1.00 per tube.—Adv.

IN THE DOCTOR'S HANDS AFTER AN ATTACK OF "FLU"

But Mrs. Banfer Switched to Nerv-Worth and Quickly Found Relief.

Every reader in whose system lie ailments which came in the wake of influenza should take careful notice of the following remarkable signed statement recently made at Uniontown's Nerv-Worth drug store. In source and character Mrs. Banfer's report is a most comforting message to fellow sufferers:

Wade H. Gayton—I had a terrible case of the "flu" which left me in a very nervous and run-down condition. I was in the hands of a doctor but did not seem to respond to his treatment. I would feel a sickness in my stomach after eating. My sleep was disturbed and I did not get rest or gain strength.

I purchased a bottle of Nerv-Worth from you and took it as directed and can truthfully say that I am no longer nervous. No sickness after eating and I sleep soundly all night and have regained my health and strength. I recommend Nerv-Worth to all.

MRS. WM. BANFER, Uniontown, Pa.

Nerv-Worth does more than merely build up the system after a flu attack. It fortifies it against such attacks.

Lima Nerv-Worth Drug Stores: Butler's, Main and Kibby; The Central, Main and High; Everybody's, Main and Vine; Hunter's, 49 Public Square. Your dollar back if Nerv-Worth does not help you.

The Central Drug Store sells Nerv-Worth at Versailles; Hittinger's, Beaverdam; Central, Vapora; Wainwright's, Delphos; Gerson's, Kenton; Powell's Pharmacy, Bellefontaine; J. W. Pfeil, Sidney.

IF BACKACHE OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat Less Meat, Also Take Glass of Salts Before Eating Breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys close you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent little-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

To supplement the home building action of the individual the Real Estate Board has completed negotiations to bring the Chamber of Commerce and heads of industry into conference to solve the acute housing problem, it was learned Saturday.

Industrial chiefs unofficially stated that the number of men to be brought to the city in the spring industrial expansion would approximate 1,000.

Desirable homes for rent are at a premium at the present time with more to be added to the population of the city within a few months.

The solution of the problem is to build more homes. This was intimated in conversations Saturday with large employers of large numbers of factory men.

Heads of industry were steering clear of the conventional plan of erecting a home for the employee.

It is the plan of organizations in Lima to form a co-operative building society to enable the employee to build wherever he desires.

JUDGE OPPOSES SHORT ABSENCES; GIVES 2 DECREES

Short time absence is not cause for divorce ruled Common Pleas Judge Ellinger Saturday when he refused to allow separation in the suit of Alia Elizabeth Stringfellow against William Stringfellow, in which she alleged she was deserted March to June 1918.

He said the law must be satisfied by a period of three years absence. Margaret C. Cochran was divorced from John Cochran on the grounds of neglect and granted control of their child and $12 monthly for his support.

Mayme Tice was given a decree of divorce from Emmett Tice on grounds of neglect and adultery.

WORK STARTED ON GARFORD EXTENSION

Work on the $300,000 factory addition to the plant of the Garford Motor Truck company has been started and officials of the company agreed that the building will be finished and ready for occupancy by June 1.

The new building will house assembly and store departments under a roof 140 by 250 feet.

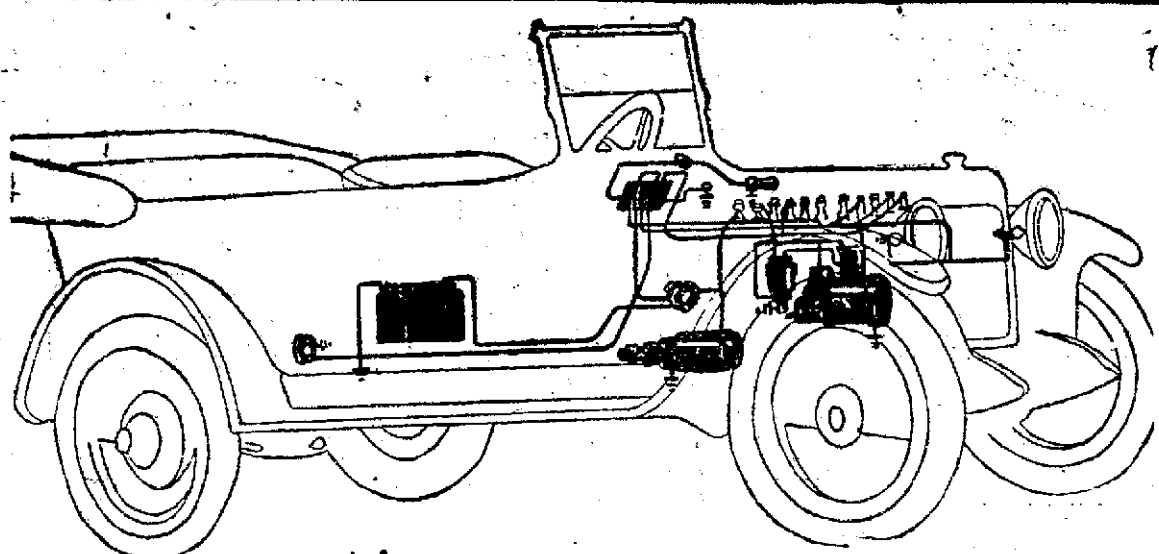

With the completion of the extension to the plant the capacity will be practically doubled.

Plans for a four story office building are under consideration, officials declare.

The "Lima Trust Plan" for Creating An Estate

The estate of the average business man consists of:

- (a) his investment in his business;
- (b) his home, clear or mortgaged, as the case may be;
- (c) whatever outside investments he may possess;
- (d) his household goods and personal effects.

Too many men depend solely upon their occupations for income and profit.

It should be the aim of every man to create for himself an income-producing Estate.

Then, when business conditions are good he is assured two incomes—one from his business and one from his Estate.

During business depression he has the income from his Estate to fall back upon.

While conceding the desirability of owning an independent Estate, many men look upon it as an achievement beyond possibility.

The Lima Trust Company believes it is quite possible for the average man to create with comparative ease, an independent Estate.

It has devised a PLAN for doing so. The plan is easy to create and follow. It is fully explained in our booklet, The Lima Trust Plan for Creating or Enlarging an Estate.

Ask for the booklet in person, by mail or phone.
